Connection(s) to Research & Theory (what learning theory or research-based method supports your chosen methodology or assessment? See page 174-175, 246-247 AND 261)

~~Contextual Factors/ Learner Characteristics:~~

Warmup: "Say it and move it board", i.e. loose letters on paper, move letters around, "What is this sound" until they get all of the letters, then make words out of the letters. Sound words out with individual sounds, then full words. Swoop under words when sounding them out

The Lesson

- Introduction (include time allotment)
    - getting attention: clap once if you hear my voice; clap twice.
    - creating a need to know: This is for getting experience with bigger and harder words. We will be reading a new story with these words soon, etc.
    - relating to past experience and/or knowledge: i dont know what the students know at this point

    - sharing objective, in general terms (I can): our “i can” today is “I can read ccvc words”
- Content Delivery (include time allotment & instructional methodologies)
    - Time:? 20 minutes?
    - Instructional Methodologies: Finger swoop on individual letters, words like “slam”, “flat”, “trap” “plan” “flag” “grab” Individual sounds first, all individual, then sound pairs cause fl isnt /f/ /L/.* Then sound out the whole word.
    - I do it: ^ x2
    - We do it: have the students sound out the letters with you x2
    - You do it, I Watch: only the students sound out x2
    - You do it: Give students whiteboards, Then students do it themselves, one letter at a time, then read the whole word, Then simply read the next word(s).

      Brag, Drum, Scar, Trim

      Make sure you know they’re doing it right by having them show their work
    - Have texts that relate to these words, for next class
- Closure (include time allotment)
    - Re-draw attention to I Can statement: remember the ‘i can’, “I can read ccvc words”, you should be able to now
